

Position and temporal attribution in reports of anomalous familiarity

117Foundation - 30 June

This note is exploratory and rests on two entries in the archive.

Both subjects report that, for a few seconds, the temporal framework around them appeared to change. Both state that the episode was brief and ended on its own.

The first reports that the landscape he was facing was no longer the one before him, but somewhere else, with a light he did not recognise. The second reports that the sky lit up and that he took the light for a town, a thing he had never seen.

Both entries date from the beginning of the century. They are brief and were written long after the event.

We offer no mechanism. Both entries are reproduced as testimony, without commentary, and the group is not in a position to say more.
